ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Historic American Engineering Record (HAER) conducted the New England Inventory during 1972 and 1973, as part of a long-range program to prepare an inventory of significant engineering and industrial sites in each of the fifty states. Sponsors for the New England project included the Historic American Engineering Record, National Park Service; the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, History and Heritage Committee; the Merrimack Valley Textile Museum; the American Society of Civil Engineers, New England Section; and Curran Associates of Northampton, Massachusetts. Under the general supervision of Mr. Douglas L. Griffin, Chief, HAER, the project began with a contract between the HAER and Mr. William H. Rowe, III, aided by Mr. Courtney Fisher. Initial results were promising, but clearly indicated the need for more extensive field research. During the summer of 1973, the HAER Washington office organized a team of historians under my direction to canvass the six New England states in an attempt to extend our knowledge of historic engineering and industrial sites still extant.

Any effort as prolonged and as large as this necessarily incurs a large debt. Mr. H. McKelden Smith, III, of Williams College and Dr. Charles K. Hyde of Boston University, served as my assistants during the summer of 1973. No director could ask for a more resourceful, diligent and congenial crew. Professor David Hall, Director of the American and New England Studies Program at Boston University, provided a large office for our use during the summer. Both the Widener and Baker libraries of Harvard University allowed me free access to their holdings and to study space as well. Mr. James B. Armstrong of the HAER staff in Washington, D.C., assisted with the final editing and map work. HAER architects Toni K. Ristau and R. David Schaaf completed the sketches found throughout the text. Scores of other individuals and institutions gave generously of their time and knowledge. As in all collective efforts, the success of the work must be shared with many; the failures are entirely my own.

INTRODUCTION

New England is generally acknowledged as one of the earliest and most important industrial areas in the United States. American shipbuilding, textile manufacture, transportation and power canal construction, arms manufacture, even the American System of Manufacture and the specialized industrial city all find their origins in New England. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the area constructed the country's first subway system, pioneered in electrical generation, and developed extensive water-supply and sewage-disposal systems. Although other regions of the United States often extended these developments, New England provided a constant leadership in industrial and engineering innovation during the 19th and part of the 20th century.

This inventory is an attempt to catalog some of the physical remains of New England's achievements. It represents many months of effort by the Historic American Engineering Record, and is a first step in what the HAER hopes will be a series of documentation projects in the region. It is the single most complete inventory of historic engineering and industrial sites in New England. This is not to say that the inventory is complete. No area so large, rich and varied as New England could be covered completely within a few months, but it is a solid beginning. The sites listed here will provide a substantial foundation for any research in industrial and engineering history.

In many cases, the HAER files for the New England Inventory contain considerably more information than is printed here and this material is available to any inquirer. We hope that the users of the inventory will take advantage of the space provided on the inside margin of each page labelled "NOTES" to add information they uncover about either the sites listed or new ones they may discover. We ask that any new information be shared with the HAER office. Without this necessary support, the inventory will become a static document. With continued assistance, we can maintain a depository that will be of great help to everyone interested in the technological aspects of our history.

NEW ENGLAND: AN INVENTORY OF ENGINEERING AND INDUSTRIAL SITES includes six states, 427 towns and 789 individual sites. The sites constitute a spectrum that ranges from the massive power canal system in Lowell, Massachusetts, to a small compass rose cut into the solid granite of a hilltop in New Hampshire. Collectively, these sites form a body of three-dimensional documents that speaks eloquently of the engineering and industrial history of New England.

USING THE INVENTORY

This inventory represents the collective efforts of three different groups working at different times. Messrs. Rowe and Fisher worked during 1972 and early 1973; the HAER team worked for four months during the summer of 1973. Also included are the contributions of a number of historical agencies and concerned individuals. The final compilation received a thorough editing in the HAER Washington office.

In order to indicate to the user just who did what, each entry includes a code indicating who inventoried the site and what kind of information is in the HAER files. Each entry is listed alphabetically by town name within a single state, and includes the site name, date or dates of construction, an address and the code. All sites coded "V" were visited in person; "L" sites are those we wanted to visit but did not for lack of time. Thus, "L" sites are only listed, their actual existence was not confirmed.
